Your Vision, Our Future

What message does this polar bear have for the world?

In July 2006, photographer Mitsuaki Iwago traveled to Wager Bay in the Canadian Arctic to investigate for himself the effects of global warming on Arctic wildlife. According to the local Inuit, the sea ice had started melting about two weeks earlier both that year and the year before. Usually, female polar bears give birth to two cubs, but this mother had only one. Iwago shot this stunning image with his Olympus E-1 digital SLR camera in the hope that it would remind us all of the importance of saving these precious creatures and helping them pass their legacy on to the future.
